MLS Commissioner Don Garber, when asked about their decision to move forward with the tournament at ESPN Wide World of Sports...

“We had such uncertainty as to when we would be able to return to our stadiums... as you know, we only had two games to kick off our 25th season. We have a close relationship with Disney, we knew that they were not having guests come to the parks, so several months ago we engaged with Disney and with leadership at ESPN to talk about 'is this something that we can put together?' Lots of hard-work, lots of difficult discussions with so many different constituents... but we are excited about getting back on the field for our fans.”

NBA Commissioner Adam Silver, when asked about concerns of high-risk attendees (e.g. older coaches) returning to play...

“The concern is for everyone, first of all – that’s why we spent so much time working through these protocols. But this won’t be forever. We will ultimately find a vaccine, presumably, or some sort of antivirals that will help deal with the people who have conditions of COVID19. For us, we feel that this is what we do. We put on NBA basketball. We think that for the country it will be a respite from the enormous difficulties people are dealing with in their lives right now. I also think in terms of social justice issues, it will be an opportunity for NBA players and the greater community to draw attention to these issues because the world's attention will be on the NBA, on Orlando, Florida, if we are able to pull this off.”
